Field of View to return to competition

West Chester, PA – March 27th, 2008 – FOV Performing Arts, Inc. today announced that after a 10 year hiatus from competition, Field of View Winter Guard will take to the floor in 2009. Based out of West Chester, PA, Field of View will compete in the Independent Open Class under the directorship of Todd Marcocci and David Stillman.

Field of View was established in 1989 by Todd Marcocci and when asked about the return of Field of View, Todd responded:

“The return of Field of View is very exciting, as I thought the color guard that I founded back in 1989 was simply a piece of history. For the last ten years, we have heard over and over - when is Field of View going to return? - I guess the answer is now obvious, and the return will apparently make thousands of people across this country very happy, as I truly did not realize how loved Field of View was during our nine year reign as World Class finalists.”

He notes that the challenge will be to maintain the identity of "sticking out in the crowd" as they did for so many years. But with Todd as designer, audiences will be happy that the same philosophy will continue but with a 21st century twist.

Todd continues “I just really want to see the members have a successful and amazing experience and, of course, entertain the audience....that is what this is all about anyway....right?”

While I thought this day would never come, I have to give great credit to our Director, David Stillman for bringing this idea to the table and now making it happen.”

One important part of Field of View’s future success is honoring our past. From Field of View’s early years, Amy Walp was involved in every aspect of the guard. FOV Performing Arts, Inc. is thrilled that Amy will be returning to add her knowledge and skill to the guard.

FOV Performing Arts, Inc. is excited to be launching our alumni association. If you are a past member or supporter of Field of View, we would love to hear from you. Email us at the below address and keep a look out for more information.
